Re: Online Data Brokers / Request for Industry-Wide Investigation

Dear Commissioners,

On July 7, 2005, EPIC urged the Commission to initiate an industry-wide investigation of data brokers that operate online and sell personal information to the general public. We detailed the activities of one such company, Intelligent E-Commerce Inc., which hosts bestpeoplesearch.com. On that site, the company offers for sale to the general public the telephone records of other people and the actual identities of individuals who use Postal Service or private mailboxes. These types of records are protected by federal statute or regulation. The EPIC complaint argues that IEI misrepresented its ability to obtain these records in a lawful way, and that substantial harm occurs to those whose information is obtained and sold.

We wish to supplement the July 7, 2005 filing to update the Commission on four matters:

First, IEI responded publicly to the EPIC complaint with a press release on July 14, 2005. 1 We reply below to the company’s response.

Second, as part of our research into online data brokers, we found many examples of companies that offer to sell telephone billing records or other confidential information to the general public. We have attached a list of an additional 40 companies to demonstrate that the sale of this information is widespread.2

Third, in light of the prevalence of these advertisements for telephone billing records online, EPIC is petitioning the Federal Communications Commission to investigate whether communications carriers are adequately protecting individuals’ data.3 The cost of building the infrastructure to offer call record data is substantial. One must maintain a web site, have contacts with investigators in many states, and process transactions quickly. There is a risk that there will be no "hit," resulting in the online data broker performing services without compensation. Many sites offer this service through "sponsored links" on popular search engines, further adding to the cost of offering the data. Combined, these factors and the large number of entities offering call records online suggests that many individuals' phone records are being illegally accessed and 2 See Attachment A. As part of our investigation, we became aware of many other companies that obtain telephone records of others, but these companies are savvy enough not to advertise their services on the Internet.

3 See Attachment B.
sold every day to simply cover the cost of doing business. Communications carriers should be the first line of defense against these practices. Accordingly, we are petitioning the FCC to initiate a new rulemaking to establish higher safeguards for telephone records information.

Finally, we wish to reemphasize the risk to privacy that online data brokers pose. These businesses are operating online, suggesting that they do not actually meet their client and assess the client's intent. Some data brokers apparently understand the risks inherent in selling information to strangers, and try to disclaim liability for the sale of personal information by including "anti-stalker" provisions in their terms of service.

Professional, licensed investigators recognize theses risks, and do not sell personal information to strangers:

[A]n Oakland, Calif. private investigator said it's a dangerous practice for PIs to take clients over the Internet. "Any time you provide information to another individual, you need to know who they are," said Francie Koehler, a member of the California Association of Licensed Investigators. "That's the part people working over the Internet miss. They don't know their client."

Others who understand the risk of selling data to strangers engage in unreliable methods to determine the intent of their client. In a sworn deposition given in the course of litigation following Amy Boyer's death, Docusearch.com's Kenneth Zeiss claimed that he vetted clients by calling them and abruptly asking them about their intentions with the data. Those who hesitated or couldn't explain how they were going to use the data were denied access to personal information:

Q. What would you have talked to the person [the client] about for up to two minutes in such a conversation?

A. I don't know that I didn't just leave a message and that he didn't call me back in that two minutes.

What I would talk to a - - any person normally is, I flat out ask why they're ordering what they're ordering. I also ask for their guarantee that they're not going to do anything harmful or hassle the person that they're getting the information on should we be able to provide it to them. But like I said, that could have been a message that I left and he called me back. I really don't know. I don't remember specifically speaking to him.

Q. If you left a message, would you leave this message about, listen, don't hassle this person or bother this person?

A. No.

Q. If you talked to the person, is it your normal custom to say, look, we're going to give you this information, don't hassle this person or bother this person?

A. No. What is say is, should we be able to provide you with this information we want your guarantee that you're not going to harm or harass this person in any way.

Q. And what do they say on the other end?

A. Well, normally they say, no no, it's not for that reason at all. Then I would ask them why and, you know, what the purpose of their search was. Sometimes people hesitate to answer me and we decline those orders. Sometimes they get offended, you know.

Q. You don't have any recollection what happened here [in the transaction with Liam Youens] though?

A. No.

In addition to stalking and murder, online data brokers pose identity theft risks. In reporting on the Amy Boyer case, Daniel Cohn of Docusearch told the Washington Post that identity thieves use online data broker services:

Cohn said Docusearch called Youens [Amy Boyer's killer] twice, though mainly to confirm that he was the person buying the information because information brokers are often the victims of identity thieves. Telephone records show the calls each lasted two minutes or less. "We are probably more susceptible because we are used as a tool by identity thieves," he said. "Sometimes it's very difficult to check out someone. . . . Does one slip by occasionally? Obviously, this one was a nut." "There is nothing we could have done to totally prevent this from happening," he said, adding that it's not clear what brokers need to do. "That's going to be the issue. What is enough? Are we supposed to give every client a personalities-disorder exam?"5

Risk of privacy invasion and personal harm is heightened by the fact that these businesses provide raw data to their clients. This further demonstrates the lack of vetting and relationship between an online data broker and a client. A professional, licensed investigator actually meets with a client and determines the client's intent. When an investigator understands the client's intent, providing raw data is rarely necessary. Providing raw data raises risks, and further demonstrates the attenuated relationship between online data brokers and their clients.

Additionally, these businesses usually offer fast "turn around times." These turn around times can be as short as one hour to obtain telephone calling records. This suggests that no official process is being employed to obtain records legally.

Other representations suggest that unofficial methods are being employed to obtain personal information. These businesses typically represent that information provided is "confidential" and not admissible in courts. In some cases, the sites specify that the client must employ legal method, such as a subpoena, for obtaining the data if the client wants to use the information in court.

Ethical investigators do not engage in these practices. However, the operation of online data brokers threaten legitimate investigators who both have permissible purposes and use legal means to obtain personal information. The market for illegal data is thriving, and without enforcement efforts by the government, the cost of doing business legally and ethically will continue to give economic advantage to companies with illegal business practices.

Reply to the IEI Response

We wish to reply to IEI, which in a press release responded to our July complaint. Much of the IEI press release supports our allegations, in that it acknowledges the company's role in selling call record information. This press release should be useful to the Commission in its investigation. The press release makes several assertions:

Law enforcement, private investigators, attorneys and many industry experts contend that cell phone and landline based call records help parents locate missing and runaway children; help solve crimes; bail bondsman locate fugitives; insurance companies refute fraudulent claims; collection agencies track down deadbeats; financial institutions locate people and collateral; and yes, spouses find out if their significant other is being faithful or cheating. Call record retrieval does not cause identity theft or heinous crimes. It is a necessary product that has been aiding the investigation industry for decades. IEI does not know of any specific law that prevents private investigators from obtaining and selling call records. When pretexting for financial records became illegal all of the private investigators used by IEI stopped offering them. Had they not stopped offering any service that was deemed "illegal," IEI would not offer such services.

This paragraph makes several arguments that are legally irrelevant. First, whether call records are useful to investigators does not speak to the issue of whether it is legal to access such records. Many different forms of personal information, including the content of telephone conversations, are useful to investigators. But law protects this information from disclosure without legal justification and process.

Second, whether call record retrieval causes identity theft or heinous crimes is also irrelevant. Privacy law protects individuals from many affronts to their dignity that do not arise to heinousness. Furthermore, IEI provides no evidence to show that provision of these records does not contribute to identity theft or heinous crimes. Other similar investigative techniques, such as access to motor vehicle records and pretext calling have resulted in the death of individuals.
After the killing of Amy Boyer, who was located with the help of Docusearch.com and Michelle Gambino.

Third, IEI's ignorance of a "specific law that prevents private investigators from obtaining and selling call records" is legally irrelevant for obvious reasons. As we noted in our complaint, 47 U.S.C. §222 protects the confidentiality of call records.

Contrary to the company's representations, we know of no legal way to reliably and quickly obtain call detail and mailbox owner information. Additionally, two professional licensed investigators were quoted agreeing with EPIC's assessment in media reports:

[Francie] Koehler, who was part of a project to research online private investigation services, said, "I know that many of them claim to get the information legally, I don't understand how that happens." When she's tried to get someone's phone records via subpoena, she said, "Every time you try, they send the telephone company lawyer in to quash the subpoena."

Reporting on the EPIC complaint, Washington Post journalist Jonathan Krim quoted Robert Townsend, an advocate of investigator licensure and best practices:

"I do not know of any legal way to obtain a person's telephonic history," Robert Townsend, head of the National Association of Legal Investigators, said in an interview. Townsend added that he thinks only a small minority of licensed investigators engage in the practice of acquiring and selling the data.

Finally, IEI represents that "[w]hen pretexting for financial records became illegal all of the privacy investigators used by IEI stopped offering them." We assume that this means that upon passage of the Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act (GLBA), IEI screened its investigators to see whether they were still engaging in pretexting. However, pretexting for financial records was considered unfair by the Commission prior to Congress taking action. Pretexting for financial records prior to GLBA would still have been illegal. Furthermore, this paragraph suggests that IEI's investigators pretext for other records, a practice that would be unfair or deceptive under Commission precedent.

Conclusion

The sale of call record information is illegal, but many companies continue to make offers to sell this information openly on the Internet. The number of businesses offering call record information, in light of advertising and other business expenses, suggests that the sale of this information is widespread. We therefore again urge the Commission to investigate these business practices on an industry-wide basis.

6 Both of these online data brokers are still operating. See http://www.docusearch.com and http://www.4privateinvestigators.com/.

7 Searching individuals' trash has been suggested as an option for legally obtaining records, however, this method obviously is not reliable enough to guarantee quick "turn around times" for the data.

How to find the source of Secretive Phone Calls

Continuous, Secretive, Obscene or harassing phone calls can be very scary and stressful. Even if the calls are not threatening they can be of great inconvenience. However there are various options available to you to put an end to these calls. In most cases, simply uncloaking the individual is enough to bring your problems to swift and successful resolutions.

What type of phone calls are generally considered to be harassing?

When someone calls and uses obscene or threatening language.
When someone calls repeatedly and hangs up.
When someone calls and breathes heavy or remains silent to intimidate you.

How often do I have to get these calls to consider it as harassment?

Generally any unwelcome call is harassing however your telephone company or law enforcement will not take any action unless the calls are frequent. If the caller threatens you with specific threats of bodily harm to yourself or your family then the phone company or law enforcement will take prompt action.

What options do I have when I get harassing calls?

The first thing to do is to call your phone company. Different phone companies have different policies on whether you should call the phone company or the police first. Some phone companies may ask you to call the phone company's local office and explain the problem. Other phone companies may require that you file a formal complaint with local police before they will deal with the matter. You should contact your local phone company and find out what their policy is in matters of harassing calls. If the threat is serious and your life or property is threatened or if the obscene phone calls are very frequent then you should call your local police immediately and file a report and provide all the details and information. You should also note down the days and times of the calls and if the caller sounded male or female and describe his/her voice. If the caller said anything or if there was any background noise then note down what the caller said and other details on the background noise. If any phone number was displayed on your caller ID you should note that down too.

What does it mean when sometimes my phone rings and there is no one on the line?

Often when you recieve frequent hang ups on your phone line it could be that someone is checking to see if you are home or its simply harassment. It could also be calls from telemarketers who use computers for "predictive dialing" to call consumers where the computer dials many phone numbers in a short period of time. When anyone answers, the computer finds a sales representative who is not occupied at that time and connects the call. If all of the sales reps are busy then the consumer may hear only silence. These type of calls are called "abandoned calls." If you are receiving many abandoned calls a day, you can call the annoyance department of your local phone company. If the repeated calls are from a malicious individual who is harassing you rather than a telemarketer, the phone company will generally report the number to law enforcement.

What options do I have to stop other kinds of unwanted calls?

To avoid unwanted calls you can use many of the services offered by your phone company. Call Screen (*60): Your phone can be programmed to reject calls from selected numbers with a service called Call Screen (SBC-Pacific Bell term; other phone companies might use a different name). Instead of ringing on your line, these calls are routed to a recording that tells the caller you will not take the call. With Call Screen, you can also program your telephone to reject calls from the number of the last person who called. This allows you to block calls even if you do not know the phone number. Most phone companies charge a monthly fee for this service. However Call Screen is not a foolproof way to stop unwanted calls. A determined caller can move to a different phone number to bypass the block. Also, Call Screen does not work on long distance calls from outside your service area. You can also use Priority Ringing: You can assign a special ring to calls from up to 10 numbers – the calls you are most likely to want to answer. The rest can be routed to voice mail. There are ways callers can get around Priority Ringing when it is used as a screening tool. The harasser can switch phone lines and avoid the distinctive ring. You can try Call Return (*69): This service allows you to call back the number of the last person who called, even if you are unable to answer the phone. Some people suggest that Call Return can be used to stop harassing callers by allowing you to call the harasser back without knowing the phone number. Use caution with this method of discouraging harassing callers, however, as it could actually aggravate the problem. This service is paid on a per-use basis. You can use Caller ID to identify the caller if they are not blocking their number or use a service offered by most phone companies called Privacy Manager. It works with Caller ID to identify incoming calls that have no telephone numbers. Calls identified as "anonymous," unavailable," out of area" or "private" must identify themselves in order to complete the call. Before your phone rings, a recorded message instructs the caller to unblock the call, enter a code number (like the incoming call blocking devices mentioned above), or record their name. When your phone rings, you can choose to accept or reject the call, send it to voice mail, or send a special message to telemarketers instructing them to put you on their "do not call" list.

How to Put an End to Unwanted or Harassing Phone Calls

Obscene or harassing phone calls can be one of the most stressful and frightening invasions of privacy a person experiences. And unwanted phone calls, while a minor problem when compared with threatening calls, can still be a major inconvenience. Fortunately, there are steps you can take to help put an end to these unwelcome intrusions.

What makes a phone call harassing?

When someone calls and uses obscene or threatening language, or even heavy breathing or silence to intimidate you, you are receiving a harassing call. It is against the law in California and other states to make obscene or threatening calls. (California Penal Code section 653m)

How often do I have to get these calls to make it harassment?

Just one unwelcome call can be harassing; but usually your local phone company will not take action unless the calls are frequent. However, if a call specifically threatens you or your family with bodily harm, the phone company will generally take immediate action.

Who should I contact when I get harassing calls?

Local phone companies have varying policies on whether to call the phone company or the police first. Some recommend that you first call the phone company's business office and explain the problem. A representative will connect you with the "annoyance desk." Other phone companies may require you to file a formal complaint with local law enforcement before they will deal with the matter. To find out what your phone company's policy is, contact the business office and ask for assistance.

For serious threats, if life or property are threatened, or if calls are obscene, you should call the police and file a report. Provide as much information to law enforcement as you can. Indicate the gender of the caller and describe the caller's voice. Note the time and date of the call(s). What did the caller say? How old did he/she sound? Did the caller seem intoxicated? Did he/she have an accent or speech impediment? Was there any background noise? Was a phone number/name displayed on the Caller ID device?

What can my local phone company do if I am receiving harassing calls?

If the calls are frequent or particularly threatening, the phone company can set up a "Trap" on your phone line. The Trap allows the phone company to determine the telephone number from which the harassing calls originate. You must keep a log noting the time and date the harassing calls are received. Traps are usually set up for no more than two weeks. The phone company does not charge a fee for Traps.

A phone company service called Call Trace may also be able to help track down harassing calls. Immediately after receiving a harassing call, you enter the code *57 on your phone and the call is automatically traced (1157 on rotary phones). Call Trace is easier than using a Trap since the customer does not have to keep a phone log. But Call Trace technology works only within the local service area. (Look in the "Customer Guide" section of the phone book or the phone company’s web site for a description of your local service area.)

Call Trace must be set up in advance by the individual receiving harassing calls, and it requires a fee for use. However, in situations where the phone company would ordinarily use a Trap, you might not be charged if the phone company suggests that Call Trace be used as an alternative. Be sure to ask.

The information collected from Call Trace or from a Trap is turned over to law enforcement personnel, not the customer. Law enforcement officers try to stop the harassing calls by either warning or arresting the harasser. With both Call Trace and a Trap, your phone conversations are not listened to or recorded by the phone company.

Is the phone company always able to solve harassing phone calls problems?

No. If the caller uses a phone booth or multiple phone lines, the phone company and law enforcement officials may never get enough identification to take further action. In cases like these, changing your phone number might help. Also, you might want to get an unlisted or unpublished number. In addition, the tips listed below for discouraging other types of unwanted calls may be of help.

What can I do to stop harassing calls without going to the phone company or police?

First, simply hang up on the caller. Do not engage in conversation. Typical crank callers are seeking attention. You have "made their day" if you say something to them or express shock or anger.

If the silent treatment does not work, you might try putting a message like this on your voice mail system:

I'm sorry I/we can't come to the phone right now but you must leave a message. I/we are receiving annoyance calls and the phone company has a trap on this line. If you do not leave a message I/we will assume that you are the annoyance caller and this call will be traced.

If you answer the phone and the harassing caller is on the line, another suggestion is to say: "Operator, this is the call." Then hang up. Or say the word "trap," what time it is and the date; then hang up.

What is the "pressure valve" strategy?

Some threatening calls are part of a larger pattern of abuse, such as stalking. Some experts recommend in these situations to get a new phone number, but keep the phone number being called by the harasser and attach a voice mail machine or message service to that line. Turn the phone’s ringer off and don’t use that phone line for anything other than capturing the calls of the harasser.

This is the pressure valve strategy. The harasser will continue to call the unused number and will think that he/she is getting through. Instead, you are simply using the number to gather evidence. You will want to save tape recordings of the calls.

Get another phone number for your use, and be sure it’s unlisted and unpublished. Give the number to trusted friends and relatives only. Do not give it to your bank, credit card company or credit bureau. Put passwords on all of your phone accounts (local, long distance, and mobile). Tell the phone companies in writing that they must not disclose any account information to anyone but yourself, and only when the correct password is given.

What precautions can I take to prevent harassment?

Do not disclose personal information when called by someone you do not know. They might be checking out the residence for possible robbery or other crime. If the caller asks what number they have called, do not give it. Instead, ask them to tell you what number they dialed.

To prevent being targeted for obscene calls and heavy breathing, women should only list their first initial and last name in the phone directory. Having an unlisted number is another option.

Children should be instructed to never reveal information to unknown callers. Instead, they should be taught to record the caller’s name and phone number along with date and time.

Do not include your telephone number on the outgoing message of your voice mail service if you wish to keep your number private. By omitting your phone number from your message, you prevent random dialers and people with Call Return (explained below) from capturing this information.

Sometimes my phone rings and there is no one on the line. What is happening?

Many people are frightened when they receive "hang-up" calls. They wonder if someone is harassing them, or if a burglar is checking to see if they are not home. In most cases, these calls are from telemarketers. Many telemarketers use "predictive dialing" technology to call consumers. A computer dials many phone numbers in a short period of time. When an individual answers, the computer seeks a sales representative who is not occupied at that time and connects the call. If all of the sales reps are on calls, the consumer hears dead silence. These are "abandoned calls."

If you are receiving many abandoned calls a day, you can call the annoyance department of your local phone company and ask that a Trap be placed on your line. In extreme situations, the phone company might be willing to contact the offending telemarketer and request that your phone number be place on its "do not call" list. If the repeated calls are from a malicious individual who is harassing you rather than a telemarketer, the phone company will report the number to law enforcement as described in the beginning of this guide.

A new California law requires telemarketers to limit abandoned calls to fewer than 1% of their total call volume effective January 2003. For information on California Public Utilities Code 2875.5, visit www.leginfo.ca.gov/calaw.html.

What can I do to stop other kinds of unwanted calls?

Sometimes calls are annoying but are not serious enough to involve law enforcement as is necessary with either a Trap or Call Trace. These might include telemarketing sales calls, wrong numbers, overly aggressive bill collectors, and prank calls. There are several steps you can take to discourage such unwanted calls.

An answering machine or a voice mail service is one of the best ways to limit unwanted calls. Available for as little as $30, an answering machine records messages when you are not available and can also be used to screen your calls. Similar to an answering machine, a voice mail service or an answering service can also discourage unwanted calls.

Another product on the market is an attachment to the telephone called an "inbound call blocker." It allows only those callers who enter a special numeric code onto their touchtone phone pad to ring through to your number. This device is highly effective in preventing unwanted calls. However, you must be certain to give the code to everyone you want to talk to. Even so, you could miss important calls from unexpected sources, like emergency services.

Several vendors sell such call screening devices. Check the web site of Privacy Corps (www.privacycorps.com) or call (888) 633-5777. Other sources include Command Communications (www.command-comm.com), at (800) 286-3491; and Avinta (www.avinta.com ) at (800) 227-1782. No endorsements are implied.

In most areas of the country, Custom Calling services are available from the local phone company which can help limit unwelcome calls. However, before you sign up, look carefully at the services to be certain they will work in your situation and are worth the monthly fee.

Also remember that many of these features only work within your local service area. Calls coming from outside the area might not be affected by these features. (Consult the "Customer Guide" section of the phone book or the company's web site to find out the boundaries of your local service area.) Keep in mind, these services require a fee, either month-to-month or per-use. To avoid having to pay for call screening on an ongoing basis, consider purchasing a device that attaches to the telephone, such as the call screening devices mentioned above.

- Call Screen (*60):

  Your phone can be programmed to reject calls from selected numbers with a service called Call Screen (SBC Pacific Bell term; other phone companies might use a different name). Instead of ringing on your line, these calls are routed to a recording that tells the caller you will not take the call. With Call Screen, you can also program your telephone to reject calls from the number of the last person who called. This allows you to block calls even if you do not know the phone number. Most phone companies charge a monthly fee for this service.

  Call Screen is not a foolproof way to stop unwelcome calls. A determined caller can move to a different phone number to bypass the block. Also, Call Screen does not work on long distance calls from outside your service area.

- Priority Ringing

  You can assign a special ring to calls from up to 10 numbers – the calls you are most likely to want to answer. The rest can be routed to voice mail. There are ways callers can get around Priority Ringing when it is used as a screening tool. The harasser can switch phone lines and avoid the distinctive ring.

- Call Return (*69):

  This service allows you to call back the number of the last person who called, even if you are unable to answer the phone. Some people suggest that Call Return can be used to stop harassing callers by allowing you to call the harasser back without knowing the phone number. Use caution with this method of discouraging harassing callers, however, as it could actually aggravate the problem. This service is paid on a per-use basis.

Can I use Caller ID to stop unwanted calls?

With Caller ID, customers who pay a monthly fee and purchase a display device can see the number and name of the person calling before picking up the phone. Some people believe Caller ID will help reduce harassing or unwelcome calls. Others, however, raise privacy concerns about the technology since subscribers to the service can capture callers' phone numbers without their consent.

To help consumers protect the privacy of their phone numbers, state public utilities regulators (for example, the California Public Utilities Commission) require local phone companies to offer number blocking options to their customers.

There are two blocking options to choose from. If the customer chooses Per Line Blocking (called Complete Blocking in California), their phone number will automatically be blocked for each call made from that number. If the customer chooses Per Call Blocking (called Selective Blocking in California), the phone number is sent to the party being called unless *67 is entered before the number is dialed. When the number is blocked by either of these methods, the Caller ID subscriber sees the word "private" or "anonymous" on the Caller ID display device.

Because of these blocking options, Caller ID is not likely to allow you to capture the phone number of the determined harasser. Most harassers will block their phone numbers or will call from payphones. However, Caller ID can be used by people receiving harassing calls to decide whether to answer. They can choose not to pick up calls marked "private" or numbers they don't recognize.

A companion service to Caller ID, called Anonymous Call Rejection (ACR), requires an incoming call from a blocked number to be unblocked before the call will ring through. Use of this feature forces the harasser to disclose the number – by entering *82 – or to choose to not complete the call. But a determined harasser can get around this feature by using a payphone. This service can be added to a consumer’s local phone service for a fee or at no charge depending on the carrier. It is activated and deactivated with the touchtone code *77.

What does Privacy Manager do?

Most local phone companies offer a relatively new service called Privacy Manager. It works with Caller ID to identify incoming calls that have no telephone numbers. Calls identified as "anonymous," unavailable," out of area" or "private" must identify themselves in order to complete the call. Before your phone rings, a recorded message instructs the caller to unblock the call, enter a code number (like the inbound call blocking devices mentioned above), or record their name. When your phone rings, you can choose to accept or reject the call, send it to voice mail, or send a special message to telemarketers instructing them to put you on their "do not call" list.

Because Privacy Manager is new, the Privacy Rights Clearinghouse would like to hear from individuals who have used it to stop harassing calls. Was it successful? Did it have shortcomings?

We welcome your suggestions.

If you have successfully stopped harassing phone calls by using methods (legal, please) that we have not discussed in this guide, please contact us at www.privacyrights.org/inquiryform.html or (619) 298-3396. We will add your suggestions to this guide.

Cellular Number Trace

This search matches the cellular subscriber name and billing address to the number you provide. Additional subscriber and account information is available through our search: Deluxe Cellular Number Trace.

Like most of our services, this search is “no hit/no fee,” meaning that if for some reason we are unable to obtain existing results, your fee will be immediately refunded.

Please note, however, that a five dollar ($5) processing fee will be retained if the number you provide is invalid. This does not include disconnected numbers for which subscriber information is still available or numbers ported out to a new carrier. There is also a five dollar ($5) close out fee on prepaid numbers for which no subscriber number is available (some companies either collect no subscriber info on prepaid accounts, or the remittance of such info is strictly voluntary). If a prepaid account has a name without and address or an address without a name, we will give the customer the option of receiving whatever info is available for the complete, normal fee of forty-five dollars ($45).

In the event a request is made on a number that is non-cellular, we will, at our discretion, perform the search or issue a partial refund, again, minus the five dollar ($5) processing fee.

By initiating a search, you agree to these terms.

Deluxe Cellular Number Trace

This search matches the subscriber name, billing address, activation date and contact number on file with the service provider to the number you provide.

In the event the contact number information is unavailable, we will provide only the additional information of the activation date, and retain the entire fee.

Like most of our services, this search is “no hit/no fee,” meaning that if for some reason we are unable to obtain existing results, your fee will be immediately refunded.

Please note, however, that a five dollar ($5) processing fee will be retained if the number you provide is invalid. This does not include disconnected numbers for which subscriber information is still available or numbers ported out to a new carrier.

In the event a request is made on a number that is non-cellular, we will, at our discretion, perform the search or issue a partial refund, again, minus the five dollar ($5) processing fee.

By initiating a search, you agree to these terms.

Cellular Number Locate

This search returns the cellular telephone number corresponding to the name, Social Security number and address (if known) of the subject you provide. Despite other companies claims to the contrary, it is not possible to guarantee locating a particular cellular phone number. Prepaid anonymous accounts and the existence of innumerable smaller carriers illustrate the ridiculousness of such claims.

We, like our competitors, search the major cellular carriers. This is not a guaranteed search and due to the time and costs involved, we do charge a fifteen dollar ($15) no-hit fee on this search. In the event a subscriber has service with a major cellular carrier and we are unable to obtain the information, the entire fee will be immediately refunded. If no such service can be verified, the no-hit fee of fifteen ($15) will be deducted from the search cost and the remainder refunded.

By initiating a search, you agree to these terms.

By some estimates there are already over 200 million cellular phones currently in use in the United States. As the mobile phone industry continues to grow at a record pace, more and more people are using wireless communication exclusively, rendering the definitive location of a traditional landline phone a thing of the past. Tens of millions of Americans are now unhindered by the connection of a hardline and are enjoying the concealing and mobile nature of wireless. This ease of motion can be maddening for the repossession, collector, process server or anyone
Cellular Call Records

This search provides a complete list of outgoing cellular calls for a given month. This search is not available for all carriers. The subscriber information must be included with search. If you are not aware of the subscriber information, you can first order our Cellular Number Trace search. Requests unable to be filled, provided correct information is submitted and the cellular account is active, will have the fee refunded.

If the submitted name and address are incorrect, the order will be reversed and notification of the inaccuracy sent. You may then order the “Cellular CNA” search in addition to this search. Please note: In the event that the “Cellular CNA” is obtained and the “Cellular Call Records” search cannot be completed, you will remain responsible for the initial search. If subject’s Social Security number is unknown, add $20 and it will be obtained as part of our investigation only. The SS# will not be disclosed to you.

A fifteen dollar ($15) processing and close-out fee will be assessed to requests for information on inactive numbers when results cannot be obtained due to the age of the inactive account, and on requests for information on invalid numbers. The remainder of the fee will be refunded.

To avoid this, please make certain you are requesting information on a valid number.

If we are unable to provide the call records on an active account, we will immediately issue you a full refund.

By initiating a search, you agree to these terms.

Back to Searches page
I have been searching for a source for cellular research and noticed that your prices are less than half of what many companies are charging. Do you really provide the same information that they do at these prices?

How soon can I expect the results of a search request?

How will I receive my results?

Can you provide information on any cellular number?

Are your searches "no-hit/no charge"?

How often do you "no hit" a request?

Are rush orders available?

How has number portability affected your ability to obtain information?

Our company requires cellular research for legal reasons. Can the results Cellulartrace.com provides be used in a court of law?

Our company needs many cellular searches performed, do you offer an additional bulk discount?

Absolutely. The average prices charged for cellular research are ridiculous, and the higher prices border on piracy. We provide the same information for a fraction of what most companies charge, and our response time is days, not weeks. In fact, the results of our investigations are often returned to the customer the same business day.

How soon can I expect the results of a search request?

Generally, within twenty-four hours. Some searches can be problematic and take a few days. Others are obtained within a few hours. A good rule of thumb is the next business day. If a search request proves exceedingly difficult, we will apprise you of the situation. To ensure results are returned as quickly as possible, please use the "Additional Comments" box to let us know of potential difficulties you may be aware of, a possible name attached to the account, an old cell number if ordering a number locate or if you have shopped the search around to other investigators who were unable to provide results. This information will help us return your results more quickly.

How will I receive my results?

All results will be sent via the email address you provide. This is the only means of contact we have, so please ensure that it is exact.

Can you provide information on any cellular number?
Anyone claiming such power is not being honest. We pride ourselves on results and after years of investigative research, there haven’t been many requests we weren’t ultimately able to obtain. However, situations in which we are not able to obtain results are generally circumstantial and there simply are no results to obtain. Some examples of this include prepaid cellular services which often have no subscriber information on file and are not billed, hence no billing address while some carriers purge their records thus no subscriber information will be available on older disconnected numbers.

Are your searches "no-hit/no charge?"

Most of our searches are no-hit/no fee. Please see the information on our “Searches” page regarding which requests carry a no hit fee, and the “more info” link for the search in question, which will further explain the application of the fees.

How often do you "no hit" a request?

Obviously, when erroneous information is provided, the search cannot be completed. If the number does not exist, it is an exceptionally old disconnected number, the account is prepaid and no subscriber name is on file, the given number is not cellular, etc. a no-hit response will be given. These situations comprise nearly all of our no-hits.

Are rush orders available?

Rush orders are available for Cellular CNA and Deluxe Cellular CNA only. The price is an additional fifteen dollars ($15) and orders placed prior to 3 pm EST will be returned that business day. In the event we are unable to provide results that day, the rush portion of the request will be immediately refunded and the request will be downgraded to a standard search.

How has number portability affected your ability to obtain information?

The portability requirement the federal government forced on the cellular industry did not have the anticipated effect of millions and millions of mobile phone users switching carriers. “Portouts” do provide a challenge, but it is often surmountable. The number of outported numbers we receive requests on is miniscule.

Our company requires cellular research for legal reasons. Can the results Cellulartrace.com provides be used in a court of law?

No. The data we provide is for information purposes only. Any records for legal use must be obtained from the provider via subpoena.

Our company needs many cellular searches performed, do you offer an additional bulk discount?

Yes, we offer a 10-15% discount for large volumes of orders. Please contact us and a member of our staff will work our a discount plan based on your needs.

Telephone Research

It is very common for us to be contacted by a client who has noticed some unusual telephone numbers either written down somewhere, pre-programmed into an employee or spouse’s cellular telephone, showing up on a caller I.D. phone, or appearing on a telephone bill which they need to know about. If you are one of these people who find an unusual telephone number, we can help you find the identity of the owner. It is important for you to know that the quantity of telephones and other devices which function like a regular telephone, such as cell phones, pagers, pre-paid telephones and internet phones, grows each year. Each of these types of devices has a “phone number” attached to it. Accordingly, when you need to know who owns a number, the task becomes more complex. Our Unlisted Phone Number Search, Cell Phone Record Search, Unlisted / Non-Published Land Line Search and other phone search services help provide phone numbers and telephone account information retrieval. These services are done every day for individuals, businesses, attorneys and law enforcement.

Cell phone records

You have many choices on the internet, and we know you can select from a variety of websites offering to assist you with your telephone research. Many of these sites try and offer you low prices and instant “this and that”. The problem is, you get what you pay for and that may be, old information, inaccurate information or information derived from an illegal source. This can mean the loss of all of your money at the least or even bigger problems for you. At A.S.G. we do not offer you an “instant” database search or simply run your information through some type of spy software package.

We cannot get access to all cell phone records or phone bills, but we are able to do so the majority of the time, and do so legally. We do not impersonate the cell phone owner or engage in any identity theft type of tactics to get this information. We simply use good old fashion investigative work. Because there are no guarantees that we can get the cell phone records you are seeking, we will not charge you until we know that we can get the records.

What will you get? Most of the time we can locate an actual copy of the cell phone bill you are seeking. Other times, we are simply able to get a listing of the calls made from the cell phone. Our search will not obtain any information that is not available on the cell phone owner’s bill, meaning, if they only receive a bill that shows the calls they made, we will only be able to get that same information.

We are private detectives who get you the telephone information you require, quickly, accurately and at a reasonable price. Our clients are people who want the information to be correct and gathered discreetly.

Often, one of our client’s main concerns is the legality of the work we do. At A.S.G., we only conduct our investigations using completely legal techniques and methods. We do not “spoof” telephone companies, assume the identity of the phone owner or use pretext to obtain the information we provide. We are licensed private investigators who comply with all laws during the course of this or any other investigation we undertake. By maintaining strict adherence to this policy, we cannot get 100% of the information requested of us, but we are able to fulfill approximately 95% of all requests received, making us the superior choice.

If you’re trying to obtain and locate phone number information, we can find it. We utilize the most updated and sophisticated databases available, accompanied by real detective work. If you need an address for an unlisted phone number we can find it. How about finding a person’s cell phone number? Find an owner’s name and address of any toll free number, cellular, pager or pay phone number. Reverse People Searches are our area of expertise. We find the phones owner by reversing the phone number or by a reverse address search. Do you have a cellular phone, pager or voice mail number and need to find someone’s address? We can help here as well. We can retrieve monthly toll call records for cell phones, residential or business, local and long distance calls. If you are dealing with an Unlisted or non-published telephone number, we have excellent resources to help you locate the phones registered owner immediately and on a no-hit, no-charge basis (Unlisted, non-published, unpublished are considered to mean the same thing... the phone number is unavailable to the general public via conventional means - Directory Assistance, etc.)
Some important information about tracing telephone numbers:

Some numbers are simply not traceable. With the advent of internet phone service, prepaid calling cards and pre-paid telephones, some numbers cannot be traced. You might have a “number” where the call came in from, but that number is simply one of the lines owned by the prepaid calling card service which handles hundreds or thousands of calls each week. It can also be a computer that places calls through the internet in the same way. Please understand that if there were ways to work with these circumstances and provide additional information to our clients about these types of call, we would, but the technology does not allow this to be done legally.

Important: A.S.G. reserves the right to refuse to provide any and all of our services to anyone at our discretion. We do not provide information about public officials, law enforcement personnel or celebrities.

General Cell Phone Information

These days, cell phones provide an incredible array of functions, and new ones are being added at a breakneck pace. Depending on the cell-phone model, you can:

- Get detailed cell phone records or all calls
- Get no cell phone bill at all
- Get your cell phone records and cell phone bill via e-mail
- Store contact information
- Make task or to-do lists
- Keep track of appointments and set reminders
- Use the built-in calculator for simple math
- Send or receive e-mail
- Get information (news, entertainment, stock quotes) from the Internet
- Play simple games
- Integrate other devices such as PDAs, MP3 players and GPS receivers

Every cell phone comes with a different “cell phone service plan”. The type of service plan the cell phone owner has can be a crucial factor in determining what information can be learned about the cell phone record. The service plan provides the type of services that the phone may use and how the information regarding the phone is recorded. If a cell phone owner has elected to not have his or her incoming and outgoing call detail... retained, then there is no information for us to research. We cannot get a cell phone record if one does not exist. In this case, the cell phone owner would get a cell phone bill, but that cell phone bill will simply have a dollar amount owed and no information about call activity. Other types of features that are covered by the service plan include the following:

- Phone directory
- Clock
- Calculator
- Games
- Personalized/custom sounds
- Appointment reminder/calendar
- Incoming-number storage
- Automatic redial
- Last-number recall
- Mute/hold button
- One-touch dialing/speed dialing
- Voice-activated functions
- Vibrate mode
- Lock/alarm
- Call forwarding
- Multi-party calls
- Hands-free headset/speakerphone
- External volume/ringer control
- Text messaging
- Wireless Internet
- Modem function
- PC synchronization
- PDA
- MP3 player
- GPS receiver

Cell Phone bills were so varied between carriers and so confusing to the public, that the Federal Communications Commission had to expand the federal consumer protection rules that apply to consumers’ cell phone bills. This action was intended to make cell phone bills and cell phone records easier to understand. It sets a national standard for how charges are explained, superseding widely varying state rules on cell phone billing.

The action came in response to consumer concerns with the billing practices of wireless and other interstate providers, outstanding issues from the FCC’s 1999 Truth-in-Billing Order and a petition filed by the National Association of State Utility Consumer Advocates (NASUCA).

Specifically, the Commission:

- Removed the existing exemption for cell phone carriers from the rules requiring that billing descriptions be brief, clear, non-misleading and in plain language;

- Held that it is misleading to represent discretionary line item charges in any manner that suggests such line items are taxes or government mandated charges;
- Clarified that the burden rests upon the carrier to demonstrate that any line item that purports to recover a specific governmental or regulatory program fee conforms to the amount authorized by the government to be collected; and
- Clarified that state regulations requiring or prohibiting the use of line items for cell phone service constitute rate regulation and are preempted.

Prepaid cell phones

Prepaid service is ideal for people who rarely use their cell phones, prefer to limit their usage, or want a phone strictly for emergencies. A prepaid phone is also a good option for parents who want to budget their kids’ cell phone usage. Since the service is prepaid, there’s no monthly bill, and unlike standard cellular services, prepay carriers don’t require a credit check. Thus, the cell phone records either do not exist or the cell phone records have no call detail.

Prepaid cell phones also are harder to identify the true owner of. Many cell phone dealers sell these phones without taking the customer’s name and address, making them impossible to trace.

Private Investigator Insights

Important Information about Private Investigations:

If you feel that your husband, wife, boy friend or girl friend is cheating on you, be sure to tell us everything. As your private investigator, we are only able to get you the proof and evidence you need if you tell us the whole story. Anything less can have a dramatic affect on our ability to get you the information you seek. Although we are among the best private investigators in the industry specializing in infidelity and cheating cases who are recognized experts in court, we are not magicians! We cannot make things exist that don’t. We cannot find infidelity where it does not exist and sometimes, despite signs to the contrary, there is no infidelity or it is too infrequent or too well hidden to be found.

Accordingly, we do not guarantee any outcome on any case.

Find Calls Made From Cell Phone Number

Find all calls local, and long distance made from a cell phone number.

Locate all numbers called from a cell phone number including local, and long distance.

This service is a very handy way to find out who someone is calling, and talking to. This will show by default a months worth of calls, long distance, local calls, with duration of call (Time on the phone call), times, and dates with each record. Most company's only include a few calls per week, and do not include dates, times, and durations. This is all included in this toll call search or cell phone activity.

You simply provide us with a cell phone number and we will show you who the owner of that cell phone called for 30 days. This will include local, and long distance calls made for a period of 4 weeks. If you do not have the cell phone number please run a cell phone trace first to obtain the cell phone number so you can then locate the calls made. You can find a cell phone number by name, and address, or find a cell phone number by social security number. You may also need to find a cell phone number using a name, and city to search with.

We use special databases, and resources that only detectives, government agencies, and law enforcement have access to and with this special access we will locate the cell phone record and provide you with all telephone calls that was made from the owners cell phone number.

SUMMARY

The Electronic Privacy Information Center (“EPIC”) hereby petitions the Federal Communications Commission initiate a rulemaking proceeding to establish more stringent security standards for telecommunications carriers in releasing Consumer Proprietary Network Information (“CPNI”). CPNI is sensitive information collected by carriers that includes logs of calls that individuals initiate and receive on their phones. Section 222 of the Telecommunications Act makes clear that carriers have the duty of protecting CPNI, with particular emphasis on privacy concerns for personal, individualized data.\(^1\) In implementing Section 222, the Commission has focused on the notice and disclosure requirements necessary to disseminate CPNI data to carrier affiliates and third parties for marketing purposes.\(^2\) However, these efforts did not adequately address third party data brokers and private investigators that have been accessing CPNI without authorization. Data brokers and private investigators are taking advantage of inadequate security through pretexting, the practice of pretending to have authority to access protected records; through cracking consumers' online accounts with communications carriers; and possibly through dishonest insiders at carriers.\(^3\) Prompt Commission action is necessary to insure that individualized CPNI is adequately protected from unauthorized third parties as required by Section 222.

In support, EPIC shows the following:

1. That online data brokers and private investigators widely advertise their ability to obtain CPNI without the account holder's knowledge and consent.

\(^1\) 47 U.S.C. § 222 et. seq.
\(^2\) See, e.g., Third Report and Order and Third Further Notice of Proposed Rulemaking, 17 F.C.C. Rcd 14860 (July 25, 2002).
2. That strong evidence exists showing the information was not acquired through legal channels. This evidence includes data brokers’ advertising guarantees that they can obtain individuals’ CPNI in a matter of hours, and that once obtained, the CPNI cannot be used in court.

3. That this unauthorized release of information suggests that the security and identification requirements carriers use to validate the identity of the CPNI requestor is insufficient to prevent unauthorized third parties from acquiring CPNI.

4. That the prevalence of this current practice and the possibility of further exploitation of lenient security standards create a significant privacy and security risk to carrier customers, one that must be addressed by prompt action by the FCC.

As a result of these concerns, the Commission should immediately initiate a rulemaking proceeding to (a) conduct an inquiry into the current method of security measures being used to verify the identities of those requesting individual CPNI, (b) to hear public comments in developing a security standard that would adequately address the privacy risks, and (c) establish a security standard by rule that heightens privacy of CPNI.

I. Section 222 of the Telecommunications Act requires that telecommunications carriers protect the privacy rights of customers by limiting access to CPNI

Congress enacted the Telecommunications Act of 1996, 47 U.S.C. § 222 et. seq., in part to protect consumer privacy.\(^4\) Section 222 of the Act obligates telecommunications carriers to protect the confidentiality of Consumer Proprietary Network Information (“CPNI”).\(^5\)

Specifically, section 222(c)(1) states:

\(^5\) 47 U.S.C. 222(c).
Except as required by law or with the approval of the customer, a telecommunications carrier that receives or obtains customer proprietary network information by virtue of its provision of a telecommunications service shall only use, disclose, or permit access to individually identifiable customer proprietary network information in its provision of (A) the telecommunications service from which such information is derived, or (B) services necessary to, or used in, the provision of such telecommunications service, including the publishing of directories.\(^6\)

CPNI includes calling history and activity, billing records, and unlisted telephone numbers of service subscribers.\(^7\) The Act therefore prohibits carriers from using, disclosing, or permitting access to CPNI without approval of the customer or as otherwise required by law if the use or disclosure is not in connection with the provided service, or listed as one of the exceptions provided for in Section 222(d).

In implementing Section 222, the Commission has focused on the notice and disclosure requirements necessary to disseminate CPNI data to carrier affiliates and third parties for marketing purposes.\(^8\) Since the passage of the Telecommunications Act, the Commission has invited public comment and published orders regarding the extent to which carriers can provide aggregate CPNI to company affiliates and third parties, and what amount of customer notice and approval is necessary for providing this information.\(^9\) However, the security standards necessary

\(^7\) Section 222(f)(1) of the Telecommunications Act defines CPNI as follows:

(A) Information that relates to the quantity, technical configuration, type, destination, and amount of use in a telecommunications service subscribed to by an customer of a telecommunications carrier, and that is made available to the carrier by the customer solely by virtue of its carrier-customer relationship; and

(B) Information contained in the bills pertaining to telephone exchange service or telephone toll service received by a customer of a carrier;

\(^9\) Id.
to protect against unauthorized solicitors pretending to be the customers themselves is an issue that deserves equal scrutiny, but has been inadequately addressed by the Commission thus far.

II. Congress accorded personal, individualized CPNI the greatest level of protection

The Telecommunications Act affects three categories of customer information to which different privacy protections and carrier obligations apply: (a) individually identifiable CPNI (b) aggregate customer information and (c) subscriber list information. Congress afforded personal, individually identifiable information the greatest protection, and only allowed a carrier to disclose or permit access to such information, without customer approval, where necessary for providing telecommunications services, with four exceptions:

1. to initiate, render, bill and collect for telecommunications services
2. to protect the rights or property of the carrier, or to protect users and other carriers from fraudulent or illegal use of, or subscription to, such services
3. to provide inbound marketing, referral or administrative services to the customer for the duration of the call, if the call was initiated by the customer and the customer approves of the carrier’s use to provide such service
4. To provide call location information concerning the user of a commercial mobile service in certain specified emergency situations.\(^8\)

\(^8\) See 47 U.S.C. 222(h) (providing specific definitions of each category of information).
III. Unauthorized third parties are taking advantage of inadequate security and identity verification methods at the telecommunications carriers to access and sell individualized CPNI.

It is not disputed that carriers can provide individualized CPNI to the customer itself. In fact, every month, customers receive billing statements from carriers outlining their call history and rate charges. Many carriers now even have online account access, designed for customers to conveniently review their past or current account activity, billing information, addresses, etc. Carriers also have toll-free customer service numbers, which customers can call to request lost or misplaced statements and call records.

However, the security standards that carriers use to verify the identity of the CPNI requestor have been insufficient to prevent unauthorized third parties from acquiring and exploiting such data for personal and financial gain, providing a significant security loophole through which other privacy and security violations flow. Telecommunications carriers are not responsible for actively disseminating information to unauthorized third parties. Rather, unauthorized third parties have been exploiting security standards at the carriers to access and sell the information acquired through illegal means.

Online data brokers are firms that offer private investigation and other data services through Internet websites. These firms charge customers fees based on a graduated scale for the research services they provide, depending on the details of the data sought. Some offer to search for long-lost friends, relatives, or lovers. Others provide services specifically for spouses to spy on each other. Though some of the information these data brokers offer to retrieve and sell are available through public records, other information comes from proprietary sources, some of which is protected from disclosure by privacy statute or regulation.
For instance, some of these data brokers offer services to retrieve telephone call records. Some will retrieve it with only the telephone number provided, sometimes with turnaround times of 1-2 hours. For example, Intelligent e-Commerce, Inc. (“IEI”), a company that runs the online investigation website bestpeoplesearch.com, will provide detailed call records for the past 100 calls of either a business or residential phone line if the requestor provides the telephone number, name, and address of the account holder. (Attachment A and B are complaints to the Federal Trade Commission concerning this company.) Though IEI specifies 1 to 5 days as necessary to retrieve the records, another data broker, Infonowusa.com offers a 1 to 3 hour turnaround time for detailed cell phone call records. (Attachment C is a list of an additional 40 web sites offering to sell CPNI to third parties.)

These telephone call records are protected as CPNI under the Telecommunications Act, and particularly protected as individually identifiable CPNI (as opposed to aggregate customer information or subscriber list information). These online private investigators do not reveal how they actually obtain this information. However, EPIC is aware of no legal way to reliably and quickly obtain call detail information. Nor does it appear possible for them to reliably obtain this information within the time frames they claim without making misrepresentations (pretexting) to telecommunications carriers or soliciting the carriers to violate the Telecommunications Act.

Additionally, two professional licensed investigators were quoted agreeing with EPIC’s assessment in recent media reports:

[Francie] Koehler, who was part of a project to research online private investigations services, said, “I know that many of them claim to get the information legally. I don’t understand how that happens.” When she’s tried to get someone’s phone records via subpoena, she said, “Every time you try, they send the telephone company lawyer in to quash the subpoena.”

Washington Post journalist Jonathan Krim quoted Robert Townsend, an advocate of investigator licensure and best practices:

“I do not know of any legal way to obtain a person’s telephonic history,” Robert Townsend, head of the National Association of Legal Investigators, said in an interview. Townsend added that he thinks only a small minority of licensed investigators engage in the practice of acquiring and selling the data.

In addition to providing suspiciously fast "turn around times," many also represent that the information provided is “confidential” and not admissible in courts. In some cases, the sites specify that the client must employ a legal method, such as a subpoena, for obtaining the same data if the client wants to use the information in court. These practices suggest that no official process is being employed to obtain the records legally.

It also appears that these violations are occurring at an alarming rate. The cost building the infrastructure to offer call record data is substantial, yet many companies offer to sell this data. These companies must maintain a website, have contacts with investigators in many states, and process transactions quickly (some as quickly as 1-2 hours). There is a risk that there will be no “hit,” resulting in the online data broker performing services without compensation. Many sites offer this service through “sponsored links” on popular search engines and other forms of online advertising, further adding to the cost of offering the data. Combined, these factors and the large number of entities offering call records online suggests that many individuals’ phone records are being illegally access and sold every day to simply cover the cost of doing business.

Telecommunications carriers are the primary source of CPNI; therefore, they should be the first line of defense against these practices of illegitimately accessing and selling CPNI.
Through Section 222, Congress specifically placed the burden of protecting CPNI in their hands. The Commission has recognized the importance of CPNI security, particularly with regards to the requirements for customer notification in releasing such information to allowed parties under Section 222. It is therefore alarming that these online data brokers are gaining access to these call records without the customers’ consent or even knowledge. Regardless of how illegitimate the practices of the online data brokers may be, they would not be possible were it not for loopholes in the security measures that telecommunications carriers use to verify the identity of the CPNI requestor. Carriers may be contributing to this practice by only requiring a few pieces of easily-obtained biographical information (such as date of birth, mothers maiden name, or the Social Security number) to change the addresses on the phone records or requesting call history data. This type of biographical information can be easily obtained by a third party through public records and used to gain access to CPNI. Many different websites have millions of records on date of birth. And online data brokers often have access to other databases to purchase Social Security numbers or dossiers that would contain the mother’s maiden name.

IV. The prevalence of this practice poses a significant privacy and security risk for telecommunications customers.

Individuals are likely to suffer injury as a result of these ongoing practices of selling CPNI. The release of such information without a customer’s knowledge can lead to devastating results and create serious consequences in the area of personal privacy. With the advent of cellular phones, call records contain some of the most sensitive and private information an individual may have. Phone records can be used to track an individual’s daily habits, to spy on a person’s communications with others, or to stalk another person. We are also aware of data brokers who offer location tracking services for wireless phone users, even though this information, under Section 222(d), is only supposed to be used for authorized emergency purposes (See services of CSI, Attachment C). Furthermore, if online data brokers are acquiring their information by accessing customers’ online accounts, they might also have access to the individual’s billing address, credit card information, and even their social security number. These pieces of personal information are so often used in security verification for other services that possessing this information would put the online data broker in complete control of the individual’s electronic identity.

Individual phone records are not the only ones at risk. Some websites claim to be able to access any phone record with only a phone number, name, and address. Some even boast the ability to provide business telephone records (See Attachment C). Given the prevalence of phones, both wired and wireless, used for business purposes, these services could be (and most likely are being) used for industrial espionage and other illicit business activities. Business phone records yield sensitive information about client lists and contact information, resulting in privacy violations both for the businesses and the people that those businesses have contacted.

15 Section 222(d)(4) of the Telecommunications Act provides that the location of a cellular phone should only be revealed in the following instances:
(A) to a public safety answering point, emergency medical service provider or emergency dispatch provider, public safety, fire service, or law enforcement official, or hospital emergency or trauma care facility, in order to respond to the user's call for emergency services;
(B) to inform the user's legal guardian or members of the user's immediate family of the user's location in an emergency situation that involves the risk of death or serious physical harm; or
(C) to providers of information or database management services solely for purposes of assisting in the delivery of emergency services in response to an emergency.
While the Commission has tried to balance competition, access, and privacy rights in determining the best method with which to enforce Section 222, the types of privacy violations described here are unauthorized, unwarranted, and serve more to promote security breaches and industrial sabotage than competition.

Furthermore, these business are operating online, and provide these data brokerage services readily at the submission of an Internet form and upon receipt of payment. They do not actually meet their clients and assess the clients’ intent in trying to access these records. They have no way of screening out clients who desire access to such phone records for malicious purposes. Therefore, weak security standards may also pose as a security threat to the very customers whose privacy the Commission is striving to protect.

V. The Federal Communications Commission should immediately initiate a rulemaking proceeding to address the CPNI protection measures used by telecommunications carriers and invite comment to develop adequate safeguards for verifying the identity of parties trying to access CPNI.

Given the privacy and security issues at stake in this matter, the Commission should immediately initiate a rulemaking proceeding to investigate the following issues:

1. What security measures telecommunications carriers currently have in place for verifying the identity of people requesting CPNI.

2. What inadequacies currently exist in those measures that allow third parties outside of the realm of Section 222, such as online data brokers and private investigators, to access individual CPNI without the customer’s knowledge or authorization.

3. What kind of security measures are warranted to better protect telecommunications customers from unauthorized access to personal and individualized CPNI.
Some forms of security measures that would more adequately protect access to CPNI might include the following:

1. Consumer-set passwords. Currently, there is a reliance on biographic identifiers, such as the Social Security Number and date of birth, to authenticate individuals. These biographic identifiers are inadequate for authentication, because, unlike passwords, they do not change, and they are widely available. A unique and separate password chosen by the account holder at the time of phone activation would greatly increase security of CPNI.

2. Audit trails. Carriers should be under a duty to record all instances where a customer's record is accessed, whether there has been a disclosure of information, and to whom the information has been disclosed. Audit trails deter insiders from selling personal information, and once data is accessed without authorization, audit trails aid in investigating the security breach.

3. Encryption. When stored at the carrier, data should be encrypted. While audit trails help protect against insider abuse, encryption assists in protecting data from security threats outside the corporation.

4. Notice to affected individuals and the Commission when there is a security breach. In many other sectors, companies must notify individuals if a security breach results in their personal information being accessed by an unauthorized person. This allows individuals to mitigate harm from the breach, and assists in the public in understanding whether data are actually secure.

5. Limiting Data retention. Call detail records should be deleted after they are no longer needed for billing or dispute purposes. Alternatively, carriers should be required to deidentify records, that is, divorce identification data from the transactional records. This will allow carriers to maintain call records for data analysis, but reduce the risk that the same records will be associated with an account holder and used to invade privacy.

Respectfully Submitted,
